Requirements for Filipino service members and their families who are non-immigrant residents of the U.S.:

For Non-immigrant service members: Non-immigrant service members may enter the Philippines with a Philippines passport. In order to leave the Philippines, the service member must have a passport, current military identification card, and valid leave papers/orders. These leave papers/orders must specify the Philippines as a destination or interim stop. Failure to possess these documents or staying past dates specified in the leave papers/orders will result in the service member being prevented from leaving the country by Philippines immigration. The service member will then be subject to remaining in the country indefinitely.

For Non-immigrant family members: The state department no longer grants preferential visa treatment to families of non-immigrant service members. Before leaving the U.S., non-immigrant family members who have one-time entry visas or who have extended their stay in the U.S. with the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) via voluntary departure order should apply for and obtain advance parole from their local INS office. Although some exceptions are made by the American Embassy on a case-by-case basis, non-immigrant family members who fail to obtain advance parole from the INS should be aware they face a good possibility of not being allowed to return to the U.S.

Commanders should ensure that non-immigrant Filipino service members and their families have all appropriate documentation prior to authorizing leave travel to the Philippines.
